"Say," growled a conductor of the De Kalb avenue, Brooklyn, car yesterday, "this company don't stand for dogs, and you'll have to let that specimen of yours chase the car on his skaters."

"I guess not," replied the passenger. "I tell yer, dogs don't go," repeated the conductor. "You'll have to put him off."

At this point Arthur Zimmerman, of No. 1,107 De Kalb avenue, the owner, grasped his yellow four-footed friend with one hand and with the other drew a little square piece of white printed paper from his pocket and handed it to the conductor, "The autocrat of the car read above the signature of an officer of the company."

Transit Privilege for Dogs. Owing to the frequent importunities of dog owners to carry their pets in their arms on the surface car lines, the officials have yielded, and good dogs, whose owners have permits, can now ride like other passengers on several of the surface lines in this city and Brooklyn. The foregoing sketch shows a conductor in the act of informing a fair owner that she is breaking one of the company's rules in carrying a dog, and
